Pulse: GMA backing fatal

4 DAYS OF EDSA I

THE DAY FILIPINOS UNBROKE THEMSELVES. On Feb. 25, 1986, as EDSA on a makeshift stage, newly elected Defense Secretary Juan Ponce Enrile and Gen. Fidel Ramos led the multitude that had gathered there and their followers in Camp Crame for 4 days. Heading the call of Jaime Cardinal Sin and inspired by Cory Aquino, the widow of the martyr. Many the people supported Enrile was at hand.

OUR PEOPLE POWER REVOLUTION IN 1986 had a ripple effect in the world.

It inspired a chain of dramatic uprisings in the repressive nations: from China in Northeast Asia to Burma (Myanmar) in Southeast Asia to Hungary, Bulgaria and Romania in Eastern Europe, from Caracas down to Chile in South America, and to Africa.

To quote the Los Angeles Times: "The civilian-backed military uprising, with its stirring scenes of mass marching to oust [the strongman Ferdinand] Marcos' ranks, made the Philippines a leader in the global wave of democratic movements that climaxed in the dismantling of the Berlin Wall and the collapse of the Soviet Union."

The Marcos regime brutally suppressed the democratic uprisings in Bangladesh, the Indonesian Javanese, and

Villar leads Aquino in trust rating

AN ENDORSEMENT FROM President Macapagal-Arroyo amounts to a kiss of death, results of a nationwide survey conducted last month showed.

Those in every four adult Filipinos (74 percent) said they would not vote for a candidate endorsed by President Macapagal-Arroyo, according to the latest survey by Pulse Asia Inc.

By contrast, the majority of Filipinos trust the presidential and vice presidential candidates of the Liberal Party (LP) and the Nacionalista Party (NP).

Twenty-two percent said they would "probably not vote for" and 52 percent said they would "definitely not vote for" a presidential candidate endorsed by the President.

The survey of Gilbert Teodoro, the administration presidential candidate, disappointed the results of the survey.

"This is of course a reflection of the sentiments of the people. As far as the campaign is concerned, it is not President Arroyo who is running, but Gilbert Teodoro," Mike Toledo, spokesperson for Teodoro, said by phone.

No Secretary Teodoro has said he is running as Gilbert Teodoro. "So accept him for what he is, what he believes," he said.

SEN. BENIGNO "NOYNOY" AQUINO III is open to getting contributions for his presidential campaign from big businessmen like the Lapuena, Lacor, and his uncle Eduardo "Danding" Cojuangco, but only if they agree to play by his rules.

"We don't want [their donations] but we have leveling off, the only thing we can promise you is a level playing field," the Liberal Party standard-bearer said in an interview with the Inquirer editorial staff on Tuesday night.

"If the system allows you, we will fix it but if you intend to take advantage through the system, let's just say sorry to each other," Aquino said, speaking in English and Filipino.

The senator said that his party had a basic requirement in accepting donations—that they are not connected in any way with illegal gambling and drugs.

Ampatuans seeking settlement

AMPAATUANS SEEKING SETTLEMENT: Ampatuans and defense lawyers fight for the bodies of the slain.

By Marlon Rames and Chris P. Aliguer

THE AMPATUAN CLAN HAS SENT EMISSARIES TO talk with the families of journalists killed in the infamous Maguindanao massacre, for a possible out-of-court settlement of the multiple murder case against various clan members, the lawyer of Hamaul Maguindanao claimed yesterday.

Lawyer Hamaul also claimed that prosecutors' "not being tough" in seeking the case against 19 Ampatuans that members indicted in the Jan. 23 massacre of 58 people, including 12 media workers.

"They're saying that (with victims not present)... it's not a crime," he said.

Ampatuans to settle with some families of the victims," said Hamaul, adding that he has talked about the reported offer with the lawyers of other clan members.

Special fund

Justice Secretary Agnes Osmeña said she intended to set up a special fund for the families of the massacre victims to shield them from attempts to buy them off to no change for dropping their complaints against the Ampatuans.

office from the prime minister to set up a financial assistance package for the victim families.

The said office has received no verified information as yet, but Hamaul said that some of the victim families were being offered bribes to withdraw their complaints.

He said these reports were still being verified.

"We've received messages from some family members and they've asked us if they will allow them (bribe) to be brought off," Osmeña said.

Even if some of the complaints drop the charges against the Ampatuans, Osmeña said that this would have little bearing on the case since it is already considered a crime against the state.

But if one or two complainants were to go for an out-of-court settlement with the Ampatuans, "It's far more or less, there are 17 people who died in the massacre," she said.

Toyota chief faces crucial US test

TOKYO—TOYOTA PRESIDENT AKIO TOYODA faces increased pressure to walk back consumer trust in his congressional testimony on Wednesday after the company's United States sales chief failed to provide clear answers to the auto maker's slew of safety problems.

The national Autos magazine said it is an all-time low for Toyota performance under a "crisis test" for his company—and perhaps for Japan's reputation among consumers globally.

His testimony "not only discredits Toyota's cars, but may also lead to Japanese companies and consumer confidence in their products," the editorial said. "President Toyota has a heavy burden to shoulder."

Monday TV shows clips of a US congressional panel grilling James Lewis, president of Toyota Motor Sales USA Inc., on Toyota's misstatements about new Japanese car safety.

Toyota's safety woes haven't generated as much public concern in Japan because the bulk of the cars recalled, mostly over faulty gas pedals and floor mats—are in the US and elsewhere. The only recall in Japan has been for the mislabeled braking system in the first gas-electric hybrid.

And while some Japanese have been critical of Toyota quality control, there is still generally strong trust in the company's safety reputation in the land of its origin.

In his testimony on Wednesday, Lewis said the huge recall of popular Toyota cars and models, totaling 8.5 million worldwide, was "not totally surprising" because of problems of sudden, unintended acceleration. Lewis apologized again for the safety defects.

Lewis failed to clarify the cause of sudden acceleration, leaving American consumers uncertain and concerned about safety, said Spanish state senator Jose Manuel Benito Sanchez. He said, "The investigation is still ongoing."

Members of the House energy and commerce committee also questioned Lewis' insistence that the problems are mechanical and not linked to sophisticated electronics in the vehicles. With a more rigorous investigation of the possibility that electronics are involved, Rep. James Walsh (D-N.Y.) said, "Toyota probably won't be a victim of our consumers."

American public attention will grow when Toyota, the grandson of Toyota's founder, appears before the House committee and government victims' representatives Wednesday.

In his prepared statement released to activists, Toyota will accept "full responsibility" for the recalls. It also will offer to make donations over the deaths of four family members in San Diego, California, in a Toyota crash in late August.

"I will do everything in my power to ensure that such a tragedy never happens again," Toyota will tell the committee. "My name is on every car. You have my personal commitment that Toyota will work vigorously and unapologetically to ensure the trust of our consumers."

"Given finally I have the face in which we have given, we have been so quick," his statement said. Toyota's traditional priority of safety first, quality second and sales volume third "became confused," it read.

His family name differs from the company name because the number of branches in "Toyota"—eight—was considered luckier than "Toyoda" with 10 strokes.

Some commentators in Japan have suggested that members of Congress may want to know they are tough on Toyota to make an impression on voters ahead of mid-term elections later this year.

There is widespread public concern here that the intense scrutiny of the company may be partly politically motivated since that the US government now owns more than half of General Motors Corp. after its bankruptcy filing. Toyota now took GM in 2009 to become the world's largest automaker. The US government also has minority shares of Chrysler. AP

Austerity plan sparks big strike in Greece

ATHENS—GREEK UNION on Wednesday staged a nationwide strike against the government's austerity measures, a show of strength against government austerity measures aimed at pulling the debt-ridden country out of financial crisis.

In the first general strike since the center-left government's election in October, all flights to and from Greek airports have been canceled, while trains and ferries are also late.

Comments in Athens were full of criticism about the government's austerity plan. Public employees, tax office and municipal officers are allowed, while public hospitals are taking strike action.

Another strike is also holding a 24-hour strike, and two separate demonstrations are planned for several cities.

The government's plan to slash health care, the private sector OGEI and public sector OGEI, severely impact a state of both existing measures announced over the past weeks to reduce the country's budget deficit from 12.7 percent to 9 percent and to 6.7 percent this year. AP

Climate danger real, says UN chief

PAUL, INDONESIA—UNITED NATIONS Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon on Wednesday urged governments to act on climate change to avoid a global warming "point of no return" by 2050.

In a statement issued by a UN official, Ban referred to a 2007 report issued by the UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change which warned that global warming could lead to a "point of no return" by 2050.

Ban said the world is facing a "point of no return" by 2050, a point at which the world's climate will be so different that it will be impossible to return to the way it was before.

Stardust High School

Aside from having his picture on the Five Hundred Peso Bill, an airport named after him and a coin naming for President, I am not sure what the Filipino youth knew about Ninoy Aquino. Most of my generation is so young that we do not even remember the Martial Law Era. Or maybe we are just too busy trying to get ahead that we forget that someone paid the price so we could make our own decisions. A few months ago, I only had a vague idea of who Ninoy was, how he suffered and what he sacrificed all for the sake of our freedom to determine our own future.

Then I found the Ninoy Cory phone. At first I was just attracted by its fun yellow color and its cool green keypad. The images of Ninoy and Cory and the "I Am Ninoy Diwan" make a definite collector's item for me. But what really attracted me was the yellow ribbon icon in the middle of the menu. Not knowing what it was, I clicked on it and found myself going into time travel with Ninoy and Cory Aquino.

I was amazed by all the audio recordings of prayers were in the phone! Naturally I am not really too familiar with the prayers from my youth but I found myself praying along with this smiling lady's voice as she intoned the rosary in the phone content. This, along with the Stations Of The Cross, special blessings and other prayers, are recorded with an equally smiling music track. It almost felt like Cory was praying with me. I heard that Cory and Ninoy agreed to sing the rosary together every night even though they were separated by jail. By the way, don't get scared if it starts playing the Angelus and the Time O'Clock Halleluyah itself. No not haunted, just set to alarm even if the phone is off.

I was so moved by the audio interviews where Cory told the story of her own struggles in keeping the family together while she hung onto her Ninoy in jail. I can't imagine how anyone's family could survive under such stress! I was amazed at the video of Tina Cory and the standing ovation she got when she addressed the US Congress. It really made me proud to be "pinoy" now. I also understand both Ninoy and Cory's values that enabled them to be so committed to their sacrifice for the sake of the Filipino. It is the hope of young people like me that our new leaders will have the same commitment to our people with no thought of personal gain. Its only when we the younger generation, read the stories of bravery and self-sacrifice of our leaders, develop our own hope that we can still change our future and care enough to sacrifice for the sake of our country too. Maybe if we all learn and be inspired by the examples of Ninoy and Cory, we can inspire future generations too.

That's why I am so touched by the Ninoy Cory Phone and am thankful to the people who made the effort to put all that information about Ninoy and Cory Aquino on the phone. No not just a phone, it's a part of who I am!

Travel sector upbeat

THE TRAVEL SECTOR IS EXPECTED to benefit from the recovering economy, as people start springing back again after travel lull.

The recently concluded Travel Fest 2010, spearheaded by the Philippine Travel Agencies Association, raised an estimated P200 million in sales over just five days.

According to organizers and buyers, PATA president Jose Clemente III, while sales from all trade show participants were still being tallied, it was safe to say that the event's success represented a 20 percent increase in potential over last year's show of P110.5 million.

This year's FTA also saw an 8.4 percent jump in the number of visitors to a record-breaking 130,000. In addition, the number of participating companies also rose to 270 from 213 last year.

"The turnout at the event is not much different from Philippine tourism has reached a critical and a more steady stage," he said in a statement.

He said that given the right incentives, such as attractive package deals or large discounts, people would travel.

Participants in this year's event offered discounts of between 30 percent and 70 percent on products and services. From Japan, included international and domestic airlines, cruise operators, tourism agencies, hotels and resorts, bus operators, educational institutions, lifestyle companies, global accreditation system providers, insurance companies, theme parks, and food fairs.

Clemente said PATA was looking at staging its next bigger event next year.

PATA holds the Travel Fest Expo every year to encourage people to travel and explore the Philippines and the world. This year's was run in partnership with Aliphat, Inc.

Metro Pacific group seeks easing of SCTEx contract terms

By Sherie C. Dumlao

THE METRO PACIFIC GROUP IS SEEKING amendments to the long financial term agreement by the government for the second of the privately-owned tollbooths under the country's longest tollway.

Metro Pacific tollway and Manila North Tollway Corp., which emerged as the low bidder for the SCTEx operations and management contract, now wishes to amend the basic terms of reference (BTR) to revise the contract.

But as the terms were deemed too tough, MPTC now wants to match the TOR, industry sources said yesterday.

The company, the sources said, wanted the financial requirements scaled down. MPTC was still very much keen on the project, though, and would negotiate with the state-owned firms, Corporation Development and Infrastructure for a more viable alternative.

It was earlier reported that the government demanded requirement that Metro Pacific subsidiary Manila North Tollway Corp. must match to buy the SCTEx contract worth up to P1.3 billion over a 30-year extension of lease that funded the construction of the country's longest tollway.

As its previous bid bid down of this requirement, the DICT had asked MPTC to improve its bid to conform to the TOR.

The BICA has yet to issue an official statement on whether it will enter into negotiations with MPTC or initiate a new round of bidding with BICA that has become unlikely due to it will get the terms it wanted.

MPTC currently operates the SCTEx under an interim operation and management contract. It is paid about P20 million a month to do the job, equivalent to about 70 percent of the monthly revenue of the tollway in 2009.

Had the MPTC agreed to match the government's extension, it will have to spend P1.3 billion a year on a tolling that currently only about P300 million a year.

According to the DICT, the winning bid will be responsible for handling the operational requirements of the tollway, including its management, operation and maintenance. It will likewise be liable for raising the necessary funds for the conduct of periodic maintenance activities on the tollway's operational, design, emergency and other related works, as well as insurance.

Gov't to sell P29B in 'OFW bonds' in April

By Michelle Y. Reyes

Raise funds and teach Filipinos working abroad to invest

THE GOVERNMENT WILL SELL more than P29 billion worth of dollar and euro-denominated bonds in the international market in April, beginning next week, to raise money to invest.

It expects to sell P23 billion worth of the dollar-denominated bonds and another P6.2 billion in euro-denominated bonds.

Lead Bank of the Philippines, one of the managers of the bond issuances, said that buyers would be contacted in the second half of March in various parts of the world to promote the bond sale.

The road shows will be held in New York City, Los Angeles, and San Francisco in the United States; London, Milan and Rome in Europe; Hong Kong and Singapore in Asia; and Dubai and Riyadh in the Middle East.

"We already have daily meetings with other senior managers and we are already preparing for the road shows," Credit Insurance, Lead bank executive vice president for institutional financing, said.

During the road shows, library programs will be conducted to help OFWs appreciate the value of investing and make them better understand the nature of bond investments.

OFW bond managers tapped by the government for this issue were First Metro Investment Corp., GFI Capital and Banco de Oro Capital.

Periods of the bond that would be sold include the government's 2010 to 2012 budget deficit of P500 billion this year and to pay maturing obligations.

The budget deficit selling for this year was lower than the 2009 budget gap of P700 billion last year.

The government expects the deficit to remain high this year given the lingering impact of the global economic turmoil that continues to constrain stimulus spending.

The sale of "OFW bonds" is consistent with the government's strategy of helping OFWs become more financially literate, specifically by teaching them the value of investing and saving. The move of the government to sell about P50 billion worth of OFW bonds will come after raising P1.3 billion from the issuance of American bonds this week and another P1.5 billion from the sale of global bonds in January.

Interest bonds are debt instruments issued by a foreign government in the domestic capital market. The Standard bond issue has a 90 percent guarantee by the Asian Infrastructure for International Cooperation.

Exporters bit BSP on forex policy

By Abigail L. Ito

STILL REELING FROM THE EFFECTS of the global economic downturn, exporters are asking the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas to reconsider its decision to maintain a strong peso to keep inflation at bay.

The board of the Philippine Exporters Confederation, composed of various local industries providing products and services to the overseas market, recently passed a resolution urging the BSP to rethink its policy on the currency. A strong peso does not necessarily equate to a strong economy, said the Philippine board.

The group said a strong peso had "demonstrated" effects on various sectors of the economy—local industries were being hit by slower export demand and exporters' profits are diminishing into competitors in the global market.

"The strong peso's impact on the domestic economy has been brutal. Philippine leaders (want) a more national exchange rate and fiscal policy that will help propel the development of the key sectors of the economy that will bring in real and shared progress to the people," the group said in a statement on its website.

In an earlier interview, Philippine president Benigno Aquino said exporters, particularly those with small to medium-scale operations, were feeling the effects of the peso's strong pricing.

He explained that larger exporters made in those in the manufacturing and services sectors could afford to bear the peso's impact.

The benchmark of national exporters, however, who account for around 90-95 percent of participation in the country in terms of number, was only P47 in a dollar.

"To make the our competitiveness is being affected by the weakness of the dollar. We don't know up to where the peso will strengthen, and had prices are also going up. It's something very unfortunate," he said.

"Exporters really can't survive at less than P40 to a dollar. Many Philippine exporters will have to stop receiving orders because they won't be able to compete in terms of pricing. If they're losing money, why sell, they still produce?" he added.

The peso closed at 46.04 to a dollar on Tuesday.

Alain Ducasse: 'Preserve your culinary identity'

The visiting superstar chef wants haute cuisine to be simple, affordable and understandable to everyone

By Norma D. Chikman
Contributor

INTERVIEWING ALAIN DUCASSE IS A little like interviewing a head of state. They follow strict guidelines and protocols and as a reporter, you have to be very careful of the length of time allowed each interview, the acceptable camera angles, the type of questions one could ask—and couldn't.

It's enough to intimidate a normal journalist, but then the man is a superstar in a galaxy of star chefs, with an enterprise of his own. He's the only chef with three Michelin starred restaurants (in Paris, Monaco and London). He employs more than 1,000 people in over 20 countries and has three schools in France. He runs the Alain Ducasse Foundation that has the distinction of creating dishes for the astronauts at the European Space Agency.

At this point, he has probably earned the right to have his own Communications Department make such demands.

On the day of the interview, Ducasse walks into the at-home of Roderica Colapinto accompanied by his "son-in-law," the prince of Roderica Colapinto, Chef Ian Theng San, Thomas Sommer, Ducasse's emotional program manager, Chef Marc Thelapin, and interpreter Anna Ralita.

The six men and women are mostly white, fit, and middle-aged. They all look like they're the kind of men who would be the first to be seen before he starts his own performance.

The partnership of the Alain Ducasse Foundation with Roderica, which he says he's proud of, is a sign that "we are at taking our identity." A strong advocate of measuring and shaping chefs, he sees the partnership as "building something renewed every day."

He himself became one of the youngest chefs ever when, at age 16, he started his career through an apprenticeship with Chef Michel Lussard, and later with Roger Vergé.

THE SAFE SCREEN

Making local TV kid-friendly

If we had a mature and TV-smart population, everything would fall in place. Households would be more prudent about shows they watch; parents, more aware of their roles as authority figures. Networks would find it easier to innovate with programming and not rely on sensationalism to hook viewers'

Celeb moms: Pre-screen, be consistent

WE ASKED SOME CELEBRITY MOMS about the subject at hand. What they said is different ways from the same sentiment:

- 1) Pre-screen the shows your children will watch, if possible.
- 2) Sit and watch with them, if you can't watch the time.
- 3) Be consistent and vigilant. If you don't want to lose your authority or imaginary honor, that even is important.

"My husband Robert and I are in charge of what Nishi watches, and her papa follows our instructions. He's involved in watching only kiddie channels and the movies we've selected for her... animated series, shows with lots of music. She likes movies such as 'Up' and 'Monsters vs. Aliens.' For some reason, if anything that isn't what she likes to see TV, she queries it and plays with us."

How should parents regulate? Check the ratings given to a particular film or TV show, see its synopsis of the show to parents, if possible, watch TV with the kids and, as they grow up, help them make informed decisions on what's good and what's not.

"No (shows), but parents and I control what Nishi watches. He's allowed to watch sports programs, cartoons, etc. He can watch adult channels. As TV, he knows what he should be watching. He's not going to see anything. Very smart, and really shows his attitude. Parents can help regulate."

No single child psychology experiment claims to fully understand a child's mind.

Abstract
The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological characteristics of young women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 12 young women, aged 18-25, who were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group underwent a 12-week training program, while the control group remained sedentary. The physical characteristics measured were body mass index (BMI), body fat percentage, and heart rate. The psychological characteristics measured were self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly lower BMI, body fat percentage, and heart rate compared to the control group. Additionally, the experimental group had significantly higher self-esteem and lower anxiety and depression compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological characteristics of young women.

Abstract
The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in a large city in the United States. The participants were 25 elderly people (mean age = 72.5 years) who were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and psychological well-being than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have positive effects on the physical and psychological health of elderly people.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

RP Film wins in first Soho fest

PHILO VILLALBA and Ellen Villena's "Yellow Submarine" won Best Picture at the inaugural Indo International Film Festival in New York, held on Feb. 18 to 21.

Starring Lovi Poe, 2009 Academy Award nominee and Oscar nominee, the movie featured 11 actors in the feature film category, including two entries from the Philippines, Gil D'Amico's "The Doctor's Kid" and "The Doctor's Kid."

The movie was released in the US by the film's producer Lee Strydom, who attended the festival in New York. Villalva, who is in Manila, said via SMS: "It's very good news to show my film there. It's great that a Mini DV film with a few budget can compete with major films."

But, when he is in New York, he described the audience reaction as "awesome."

In his win, but co-producer Jorge Sallan explained that the movie "celebrates ending-edge digital technology while honoring traditional forms of storytelling."

BACK STORY

Lee Strydom

As I wrote last week, there was a developmental reading of a new musical called "Broadway Backwards" early in the evening. Over the past several days, we've been working on the musical, working on costumes and hair, working on the music and script. Broadway's very special about this musical, though it's about a backstage in American history.

In the afternoon I had a sound check at Lincoln Center for the very special event called "Broadway Backwards." This is the 8th year the it's being staged.

"Broadway Backwards" is a musical produced by the 1000

Orchestra, the musical and Broadway's 1000th Anniversary. The Center was established in 1962 as a home for all LGBT. Today it is home to over 300 direct community organizations that meet here every week. It's within this organization that we've created over 30,000 jobs each month.
